Abstract of the Disclosure

Offered by the present invention is an image decompression and half-toning system and methodology which operate in stages to select portions, but not the entirety, of the relevant image data file that is to be processed. With respect to each handled portion, practice of the invention involves performing first an appropriate decompression function, next, a half-toning function, and then, a buffer-storing function.